Her Everlasting Crusade

The sun beams intensely on their faces
Their feet burn
They have been walking for so long
With flags in hand
And armor on their heads
They keep marching
And so the story begins

Her eyes were glued to the screen
A red, white, and blue banner in her hand
She knew why she was smiling
They were so close to taking back the Holy Land

And at six years old
What an interesting sight
It was almost horrific
To see her little eyes glow

It was embedded in her DNA
It spread like the Plague
It was passed from generation to generation
It stained her skin...

But you can't see it

She watched as her legends liberated her land from liability
Her passion for purity perfection
And the soldiers sonorously spoke
They returned to their revolutionary rebellion

And they marched for her
They screamed for her
They injured for her
They lynched for her

As payment, she would continue their cycle

The sun beams intensely on their faces
Their feet burn

They have been walking for so long
With flags in hand
And armor on their heads
They keep marching

Her right may be different from yours
No one ever understands
As long as there are people like her
They will keep on marching to regain the Holy Land

And so the story continues
